Recognize how scammers make you pay

Part 3 of 3 | By Brandy Bauer

Whether it's a phone call from someone impersonating a grandchild in trouble, or a plea for a donation from a fake charity capitalizing on a recent disaster, one of the quickest ways to spot a scam is by recognizing how you are being asked to send money.

The Federal Trade Commission warns consumers that if someone says you can only pay by wiring money, putting money on a gift card, or loading money onto a cash reload card: that is a scam. (See video below for more information.) Hang up the phone, throw that email or flyer away, and report it to the FTC to keep yourself and others safe.

Bauer, (2017 January 18).
